Quick Launch Area Moved and Will Not Change Back

My quick launch area was always on the left of the task bar, next to the start menu.

While I was trying to add another program to the quick launch area I moved the sizing handle to the right. I appear to have moved it too far to the right and it disappeared. Now the Quick launch area is on the top of the task bar with all the active tasks on the second row.

I can find no way to move it back to where it should be and I have no sizing handle to move. I have moved the task bar to every side of the screen and restarted the computer but nothing works.

It is very confusing with the quick start programs occupying just a small part of the top row and active tasks all squashed into the second row.

Any suggestions gratefully received.

Hover your mouse over near the Notification Area (some of us still call it the SysTray) until the double-headed arrow appears, then drag it back to where it shows the right number of QL icons.

You MAY need to adjust the height of the Taskbar. Hover over the top edge of the Taskbar until you get the up-down arrow, then drag it up or down to make the Taskbar any number of rows high, even down to zero. Probably 2 rows will do for now. When you get the QL adjusted, you can put the Taskbar back to a single row or whatever suits you.

It is also possible to move the Taskbar's sizing bar too far to the left, so watch out for that possibility. If it happens, just use the usual tricks to resize that, too.

Revised 6/22/2009 JMM