

DSN Files

These are files that are given the .dsn extension to protect your private use of them. Your computer must be setup to create .dsn files.

If you are having trouble opening such files, you may want to scan your registry to determine if your computer has been setup to create .dsn extensions instead of the usual extensions used to associate files with the programs that will open them.

My google search of this problem indicates you may be able to open these files in WordPad (a text editor). IF you can't, it maybe a registry error causing the problem and that is what the registry scan is for on the other link I sent to you.
